

A DIFFERENT WAY TO SHOW UP

He was simply searching for a place where his wife could have an ultrasound.

When Danny found Pregnancy Choices, something else caught his attention: classes for fathers. "I realized I was searching for a place to learn to be a dad."

What he found was far more than he expected.

As a business owner and former coach, he already understood the value of having someone in your corner - someone who can offer perspective, ask the right questions, and help you grow. But this time, he was the one being coached.

Through the Good Father Program and one-on-one coaching, he discovered a partner who helped him grow spiritually and emotionally and challenged him to see life from a different perspective.

The biggest lesson was simple, but it changed everything: Learn to be proactive instead of reactive.

For Danny, that meant learning to pause before responding. To think differently. To approach difficult moments with intention instead of simply reacting to them.

And that change began to make a difference at home.

He learned how to show up differently for his wife during her pregnancy. He became more intentional about supporting her emotionally. When challenges came, he was better equipped to respond with patience and positivity instead of reacting out of frustration.

"It made both of our lives easier."

He was becoming the kind of husband he wanted to be and the kind of father he hoped to become.

Today, one question has become part of the way he approaches relationships: "What can I do to support you?"

Danny came to Pregnancy Choices looking for a place to learn to be a dad. He left with something even greater: the tools, perspective, and mentorship to become a better man, husband, and father.

"I am deeply grateful for my life coach and his partnership."
